“Son of man, can these bones live?”

— Ezekiel 37:3

God showed Ezekiel a valley of dry bones and asked the one question only God can answer: can these live?

The answer, then and now, is the same — and it comes by the same means. The word of God gives form. The Spirit of God gives life. Together, and only together, they make dead things stand.

This book traces that single pattern through the whole Bible, from the dust of Eden to the rushing wind of Pentecost, from the valley of bones to the seven letters Christ dictated to His own church. At every scale — creation, restoration, new birth, conversion — the mechanism is the same. Where the word goes silent or the breath is withheld, the bones dry out. Where both are present, the dead rise.

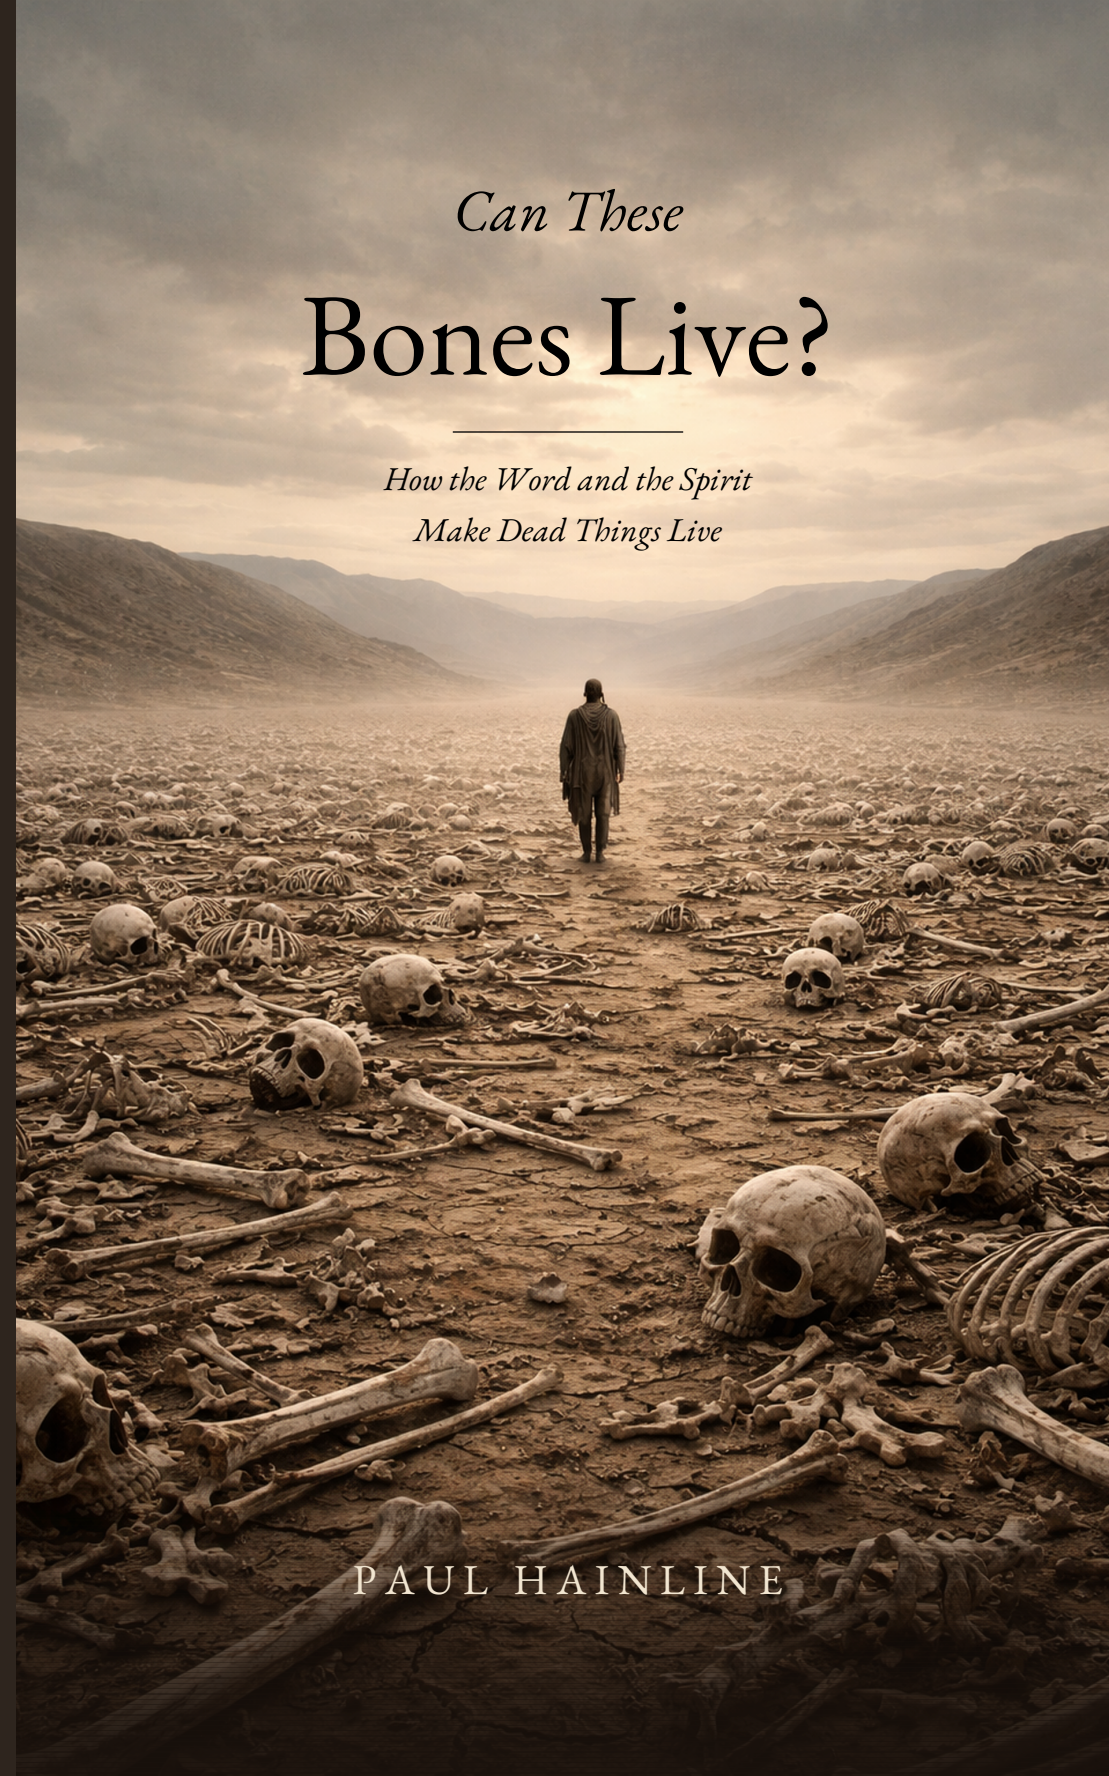

Eleven chapters. One question. One pattern. One God who has been doing this from the beginning.

Scripture quotations from the New American Standard Bible® (NASB).

Can These Bones Live?

*How the Word and the Spirit
Make Dead Things Live*

PAUL HAINLINE

The valley is silent. There is no wind. No birds. The ground is covered with bones — human bones, bleached and dry, as far as a man can see.

This is where God brought His prophet. And then He asked him a question only God would dare ask.

“Son of man, can these bones live?”

That question hangs over every generation that has watched the life of God depart from a people. It hangs over the Church today.

Scripture answers it — not with a platitude, but with a pattern. The word of God gives form. The Spirit of God gives life. Together, and only together, they make dead things stand.

From the dust of Eden to the rushing wind of Pentecost, from the valley of bones to the seven letters Christ dictated to His own church, the mechanism is the same. And it still works.
