

About the Author

Paul Hainline is a student of God’s Word who writes from the conviction that the Scriptures, rightly read, are clear enough to settle every essential question. Together with his wife Pam, he publishes books grounded in careful attention to the biblical text — books written to point readers back to the Scriptures themselves.

He is the founder of NobleMind Press.

“Now why do you delay? Get up and be baptized, and wash away your sins, calling on His name.”

— Acts 22:16

Is baptism really necessary?

The question has been asked in churches, Bible studies, and living room conversations for generations. Every answer turns on what the Scriptures actually say.

This book opens the New Testament and lets it speak. What the Lord and His apostles taught. What the early church did on the day of Pentecost and in every conversion after.

The common objections, answered from the text rather than from tradition.

Thirteen chapters across three parts, ending at the question Ananias asked Saul of Tarsus two thousand years ago — the same question that echoes through every page of the New Testament:

“Why do you delay?”

Scripture quotations from the New American Standard Bible® (NASB).

The question has echoed through two thousand years of Christian conversation. It has divided families and churches. It has been answered with so many assumptions and so few Scriptures that honest readers wonder if an answer is even available anymore.

It is.

The New Testament speaks plainly on this — more plainly than on almost any other subject.

The Lord gave a commission. The apostles carried it out. The early church followed the pattern in every recorded conversion. And the common objections, when actually tested against the text, dissolve.

“Now why do you delay?”

Thirteen chapters. One question. The answer the apostles themselves would give, examined verse by verse, from the book that still settles the matter today.
