

What if the strongest evidence for who Jesus was isn't found in miracles or prophecy — but in the man Himself?

The four Gospels present a character so consistent, so original, and so far above His biographers that no human explanation accounts for Him. The men who wrote about Jesus misunderstood Him, feared when He was calm, and fled when He stood firm. Yet somehow they produced a portrait no dramatist has ever matched.

This book examines Jesus from every angle — as a literary creation, a mythological figure, a product of His culture, a teacher, a reformer — and demonstrates that He fails every test for human invention. He violates the laws of myth. He exceeds the capacity of His authors.
He differs from every figure who came before or after.

The argument is cumulative and the conclusion unavoidable: either this character was real, or we face a miracle greater than any He performed — the creation of a fiction more convincing than fact.
